Description

Sugar Mango Ryder is the result of crossing our Brazil Amazonia, which comes from the Amazonian region of Brazil, with a Ruderalis plant. This cross is a good example of Cannabis Ruderalis, which, over the generations, has been crossed and re-crossed to produce a strain with Indica characteristics and the autoflowering genetic programming of Ruderalis.

The result is a mainly indica auto strain with a fruity, typically indica taste and aroma, producing better developed, more abundant plants that can reach 90cm. As flowering does not depend on the photoperiod, she can be grown at any time of the year although yields improve the better the environmental conditions. A good tip for outdoor growing is to plant out as soon as the good weather starts then repeat a few days before harvesting the first crop to give two good harvests a year. Some growers do more, though owing to the less favourable conditions, these crops tend to be less productive.

For indoor growing we recommend a 20/4 light/dark cycle throughout.
